(all e-mails must have your name and CLA 3111 in the subject line). I am happy to answer questions, but you are responsible for obtaining notes from any missed classes (make friends with your classmates) and following the syllabus. If you are having trouble with the course—for example, if you fail the first test— meet with me as soon as possible.

Course Design: Athens, the city of Pericles, Socrates, Plato, and countless other major figures in western civilization will be our subject. We will examine how the literary and archaeological record reveals the vibrant life and history of this most important of ancient cities and how a city develops as a living entity.

Course Objectives

Content: Students will be able to locate, identify, date and discuss the significance of the major monuments of ancient Athens.

Communication: Students will be able to write clearly and effectively about individual monuments and the overall development of the city in both essay exams and the paper project

Critical Thinking: Students will comprehend the historical and archaeological framework of the development of the ancient city of Athens and its role in western history. Students will understand the complexities inherent in the archaeological record.
